RECORDED in 1966 in front of the biggest live audience of his career, Matt Monro's legendary capacity concert at Manila's prestigious Araneta Coliseum smashed the venue's previous record – set by Nat King Cole.

For the five years since 1961 when he'd been named Top International Act by Billboard, Matt had been the only British singer with the talent to hold his own in that exclusive league of super-vocalists that included Jack Jones, Tony Bennett and, of course, Frank Sinatra. Matt went on to fill cabarets, night clubs and stadiums from Australia, Japan and Hong Kong to Africa, the Middle East, Europe, and throughout the Americas.

Highlights here include his current single smash "Yesterday", his 1964 No. 2 Eurovision entry "I Love The Little Things", ballad favourites "Exodus" and "Somewhere", and superlative live versions of his hits "Can This Be Love", "For Mama", "From Russia With Love" and "Walk Away". Bonus tracks from Matt's 1983 concert – his last in the Philippines – include Matt's theme song "Born Free".

These previously unreleased recordings came to light through the efforts of Matt's daughter Michele, and we can now all eavesdrop into two superb Matt Monro concerts from long ago and far away but which, nevertheless, sound as fresh and timeless as the day they were first performed.
